Morris Owen has selected Egress to protect and control information shared between the firm and its clients

New legislation introduced on 6th April 2010 gave the Information Commissioner's Office the power to issue fines of up to £500,000 for breaching the Data Protection Act. This dramatic change to UK Statute placed organisations that process client information in grave danger as guidelines stipulate the use of encryption when transferring personally identifiable information electronically.

Morris Owen has provided financial services throughout the South West since the early 1930s and frequently exchange confidential information with their clients. Offering an extensive range of general and specialist accountancy services including payroll bureau, corporate finance, and audit, Morris Owen became increasingly concerned with the risks associated with sharing sensitive data. Acting in the interests of their

Rapid deployment and low cost of ownership

"Delivered as a hosted service to guarantee rapid deployment and low cost of ownership, Email and File Protection enables users to encrypt information in a single click, protecting data wherever it resides."

Meets UK legal requirements

"Since the firm has implemented Email and File Protection we are confident that information we distribute externally meets UK legal requirements and mitigates the risk of data loss."

Seamless integration

"Email and File Protection integrates seamlessly with our daily workflow, making it easy to use, while offering the level of assurance we need when processing client data. Best of all, our clients now benefit in return, enabling them to protect and audit confidential information, as it's all part of the service."
